STAT210 : Elements of Statistics

The course covers the fundamentals of working with data (collection, classification, graphical and numerical representation, the ethical handling of human subject data); elements of probability theory with emphasis on discrete and continuous variables and their distributions; descriptive statistics (measures of centrality and variability), and basic principles of statistical inference with the focus on point and interval estimates, and hypothesis testing.

Credits 3